in China and Russian emigres who obtained Soviet passports in China are considered stateless by the Chinese Government and that they must apply for Chinese passports. The only exception to this is that those persons holding Soviet passports with Chinese entry visas endorsed thereon are considered to be Soviet citizens. There was no mention as to whether the Chinese Government would issue visas to persons in China who obtained passports or would grant visas only to Soviet passport holders entering China.

the Soviet Citizens' Association's newly elected Executive and Revision Committees, the Soviet Consul General, F. P. Halin recommended informally that members make every effort to maintain quiet among the Shanghai Soviet community during the present period of strained Sino-Soviet relations. Halin discussed instances of the Chinese refusing resident certificates to Soviet citizens arriving from other cities. He stated that the recent actions of the Chinese Government affecting the status of Soviets in China are known to Ambassador Petrov
